COMPREHENSION

Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow:

It was on top of this very mountain that Itao, the escaped slave-boy, had built his home, all by himself three years before this story began. He built his wooden hut on the same pattern as the straw huts on the plain below.

The wooden hut had become a real hunters' camp now. It was small and Itao was the master of it.

In the middle of the hut there was a huge tree. On one side of it, marks had been cut in the trunk, one for each season, dry and wet, which had passed since Itao came. On the other side were marks to show the height of the various members of the band: Adja, Ajmel, Irit – Irit was exactly the same a Boo.

At the foot of the tree was the fire-place with its two blackened stones, its various mud cooking-pots and a heap of ashes.

The children were now at dinner, all sitting cross-legged on the mat round a bowlful of rice and a piece of roasted meat. They dipped the rice in some oil and green pepper before they ate it. After their meal there would be a little honey- the honey that Boo and Irit had stolen from the bees.

'Where did you find this honey?' asked Itao, with his mouth full.

'Below the stream. Past the cave.'

'You went as far as that?'

'It was Boo.....'

'Go on. Next you'll be going right down to the valley and saying that Boo made you go. You know I have forbidden you to go there.'
