COMPREHENSION

Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow:

At Hawaii, Cook and his men found rest and fresh food after the hardships of their long and bitter voyage in the far north. The Hawaiians were very friendly and treated Cook as a god, and the two ships remained for some time, taking fresh supplies of food and water and making repairs to the weather-beaten ships. At last, in February 1779, they left; but soon after, a gale damaged the foremast of the 'Resolution' and they were forced to return to Hawaii. This time the natives were less friendly. They no longer treated Cook as a god, and marines had to be posted to guard those repairing the 'Resolution's' mast on the beach. Then the Hawaiians stole one of the 'Discovery's' boats. Cook himself led a party ashore to recover the boat or hold the Hawaiian king captive until it was returned. But as he parleyed with the king on the shore, one of the natives attacked him with a spear while another stabbed him in the back, so that Cook fell into the water and was killed. This was on 14th February 1779. The rest of his small party escaped. Though they were eager for revenge, nothing could bring back their captain, and as he himself would have wished, they soon sailed north once more. But, as Cook had foreseen, no passage to the Atlantic was to be found.
